

I do not think that is fair, nor should the FCC allow Sinclair Broadcasting, a media giant that owns more than sixty television stations, to dictate changes in what their local stations have already scheduled. For Sinclair to act against a presidential candidate, John Kerry, in such a blatant manner indicates to me that the FCC should intervene and stop the showing of an anti-Kerry program, Stolen Honor. This is taking undue advantage of the "free public airways" to present an "unpaid for" political message in prime time. It will do no good for the FCC to give Sinclair a "slap on the hand" after the fact. This scandalous action should be stopped beforehand. The FCC can't say that they have not been forewarned. Further, the FCC should make sure that in the future large companies do not control our airways. Media consolidation is not what American citizens deserve.
